

Main Currents in American Thought

1927. Part Three of Three. The Beginnings of Critical Realism in America covers the period from 1860 to 1920. Introduces The Great Revolution: A New America in the Making: Rise of capitalistic industrialism submerging the older agrarianism, the Enlightenment, the Jacksonian frontier; Aristocracy Dead: The principle of democracy accepted, yet driving toward a plutocracy. A middle-class, urban civilization; Cleavages: Western agrarianism; Eastern capitalism. The South confused, bitter, hesitant. Expansion of the frontier and the cities. The swift extension of the psychology of the city; Changing Patterns of Thought: From the frontier came the doctrine of preemption, exploitation, progress; From the impact of science came the dissipation of the Enlightenment and a spirit of realism; From European proletarian philosophies came a new social theory; and Certain Drifts: to unity, to realism, to criticism. A wonderful account of the genesis and development in American letters of certain germinal ideas that have come to be reckoned traditionally American-how they came into being here, how they were opposed, and what influence they have exerted in determining the form and scope of our ideals and institutions.
