

The Faith of the People Called Quakers, in Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ: Set Forth in Various Extracts from Their Writings (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Faith of the People Called Quakers, in Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ: Set Forth in Various Extracts From Their Writings Nevertheless, the truth of Christianity does not depend upon the conduct of its professors; for however inconsistent this may be, yet the excellency of the Christian faith, and the purity of its precepts, will ever bear a strong and unequivocal testimony against the conduct of those who hold the Truth in unrighteousness. Let none therefore, from the weakness or wickedness of was. Kind, condemn a religion, the best calculated of any for the correction of these evils, and for our redemption from them; and which is indeed peculiarly adapted to the nature of a Being prone to sin, and encompassed with many infirmities; but who is at the same time called to glory and to virtue, and designed for that life and immortality which are brought to light by the Gospel.
